

Info:

In addition to this file, there are low fidelity and high fidelity mockups on github.

Reflection:

Easily the most common genre of bug had to do with css. I am not very experienced with it so getting used to all of the quirks took a while. One type of hurdle I had to overcome was displaying evenly spaced items in the layout that didn't want to make me pull my hair out. Long story short, I made use of the display: flex property a few times, and it made that process much easier. For more info on that, here you go: <https://css-tricks.com/snippets/css/a-guide-to-flexbox/>.

My brand identity is a very playful one. As such, I wanted to use fun colors and fonts. The green used in the nav bar is reminiscent of grass on a warm summer day, and my font used for the title (American Typewriter) is whimsically serifed. Basically, pets make you happy so I wanted the theme of the website to reflect that.